

I am against the "broadcast flag" or other future technologies that take what little power the consumer has already. I am against the DMCA and Digital Rights Management technologies. I will not purchase equipment that has these technologies in place. I beleive that these technologies hurt the innocent (casual) consumer by depriving him of the right to time-shift programming and provide no actual protection to the copyright holder against the 'serious' pirates.

How about considering the consumer once in a while? We seem to get left out of all of this "innovation".
